Stem Cells Potential Conflict of Interest Disclosure Form (page 1 of 2)

The policies of Stem Cells Journal regarding potential financial conflict of interest of authors, Senior Editors, and the Editorial Board should be clearly defined for the benefit of readers, authors, and corporate sponsors. The purpose of this policy is to clarify the policies for all parties, not to limit the important collaboration between industry and scientific investigators. The corresponding author must complete, execute, and submit this form to the Editor-in-Chief on behalf of all the authors listed on the manuscript.

A (potential) financial conflict of interest exists when professional judgment concerning a primary interest (such as patients' welfare or the validity of research) may be influenced by a secondary interest. This may arise for authors of an article when they have a financial interest that may bias, usually without their knowledge, their interpretation of their results or those of others.

If a future revised version of this manuscript is accepted for publication, the corresponding author must newly complete, execute, and submit this form to the Editor-in-Chief on behalf of all the authors listed on the manuscript.

For submitted papers that contain information affecting commercial products or potential products, we require that the authors declare any financial interest in the product or in potentially competing products, above the level set by NIH disclosure guidelines (financial compensation greater than $10,000 per year, or stock, stock options, or other ownership interests worth greater than this amount). The policy applies to investors and consultants of the involved commercial venture. We also require that employees of companies whose commercial products are discussed reveal the fact of their employment, usually simply by designating their company as their institution and address.

It is the responsibility of the corresponding author to review this policy with all authors and to collectively list the appropriate commercial relationships. In such cases, a note will accompany the published paper, describing the applicable relationship as follows. Additionally, the information must be provided in the comments to the Editor-in-Chief during the online submission process.

1. One (several) of the authors (author's initials) has (have) declared a financial interest in a company whose (potential) product was studied in the present work.
2. One (several) of the authors (author's initials) has (have) declared a financial interest in a competitor of a company whose (potential) product was studied in the present work.
3. One (several) of the authors (author's initials) is (are) employed by a company or a competitor of a company (X company) whose (potential) product was studied in the present work.

For work involving a biomedical product or potential product partially or wholly supported by corporate funding, a note will accompany the paper stating: This study was supported (in part) by research funding from (company name) to (author's initials).
